

Target data-breach settlement: A lot and a little, all at once

Star Tribune | March 31, 2015

The recent settlement by Target, of the dozens of data breach class actions, following the retailer's release of millions of its customers' debit and credit card numbers, will cost the company about $25 million. The problem with the Target settlement is not that it achieved no benefit. It did. But the benefit is very small and in great disproportion to its cost. The settlement data suffers from a breach – one of common sense. Click here to read Randy Maniloff's full article on the Target data-breach settlement.

This correspondence should not be construed as legal advice or legal opinion on any specific facts or circumstances. The contents are intended for general informational purposes only, and you are urged to consult a lawyer concerning your own situation and legal questions.