Patti Luczak focuses her practice on medical malpractice litigation and general liability matters. She represents hospitals, physicians, nurses and other healthcare practitioners against professional liability claims at the trial and appellate court levels. She also defends commercial entities and corporations against premise liability lawsuits.

Patti is called upon to defend a wide array of medical negligence matters, including cases involving death, brain-damage, surgical complications, medication errors and orthopedic injuries.

During law school Patti prosecuted cases with the family violence unit of the Philadelphia District Attorney's Office and interned at Women Against Abuse. She also worked in Drexel's Environmental Justice Field Clinic and assisted in the representation of underprivileged communities through the law school's partnership with the Public Interest Law Center. At graduation she received the Service Honors Award for her commitment to pro bono work.

Before embarking on her legal career, Patti worked as a lab analyst and commercial site assessor for an environmental engineering firm.

Representative Matters

- Assisted in successful defense of an obstetrician against allegations that failure to perform a cesarean section caused a brachial plexis injury and long term developmental injuries including development of Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder
- Assisted in obtaining a defense verdict for a Philadelphia based hospitalist against allegations that encephalopathy and several months hospitalization could have been avoided
- Represented a large Pennsylvania health and hospital system in numerous medical malpractice cases involving permanent injuries, impairments and death
- Assisted in reaching resolution of many high exposure matters via an Alternative Dispute Resolution format including cases involving injuries related to neurosurgical, emergency, obstetrical, surgical, cardiac and long-term care
